The huge loss of Green Belt land in the south east is very concerning. Climate change is the biggest challenge we face. Yesterday's announcement by the government on the UK 's target to become carbon neutral will not be helped by this development. We may need to be planting trees on farm land in the future. I am at a loss to see how this benefits Warrington. It is hard enough to get into town from the south, over a Victorian swing bridge, as it is and I see no mention of how the A49 is to be improved or any new crossing of the Manchester Ship Canal. Is this just a development for commuters to get on the M56 and work everywhere but locally? More effort must be made to use brownfield sites for housing before green belt is lost forever. People are becoming increasingly aware that our green spaces are vital for health and wellbeing. To lose part of a nature reserve is unforgivable.
